WITH GREAT MEN

William H. Taft.

"Now, I lead the most humdrum existence," said Secretary of War William H. Taft, "and I cannot think of one interesting thing about me."

"Mercy," I cried, in astonishment, "do you never do anything?"
"Do I never do anything?" he scornfully demanded, pointing dramatically to a huge pile of papers on his desk. "What do you call that?"
"That is all done by the official Mr. Taft. Isn't there any other?"

Secretary Taft leaned back, and appeared to give the matter careful, even judicial consideration.

"There is a big, fat fellow they call 'Big Bill Taft,' who is trying so they say, to reduce his weight, and who really does try to find time occasionally for riding and reading. But he doesn't do anything at all interesting. Even he is always in a hurry, and rushing about, weighing himself in between the demands of his official ego till he has no time to be interesting."

"Well, and during this interregnum, has he any hobbies, or the like, which might be twisted into a semblance of interest for the public at large?"

"Oh, it is the official Mr. Taft who has the hobby. It is the Philippines. Let's see about this other fellow."

"For one thing, he is very fond of riding. He has a fine horse, a big one, as it would have to be to carry him, and he canter around the country sometimes."

"Is that part of your course of treatment to reduce your 'too, too solid flesh'?"

"That ought to help," he said, reflectively, "I'll go riding this very afternoon."

"I'd like to read, if I could ever get out of this terrible rush, but I don't do much of it any more."

"Oh, I had almost forgotten. I have one hobby; a real one, that I talk about a lot and in every way it qualifies under the head of a genuine hobby. It is Murray Bay, where I go every summer."

"That's a great place for fun. It is in Canada, about eighty miles north of Quebec"—and in a twinkling the last vestige of the official Mr. Taft had disappeared. He they call "Big Bill" was reveling in anticipatory dreams of his hobby, a two months' outing at this Canadian paradise.

"Oh, such a place for good times," proceeded Mr. Taft. "Justice Harlan and myself go up there every summer. They have splendid golf links there, and we have exciting matches; we go on picnicking parties up the St. Lawrence; arrange boating parties, and sometimes we fish."

"Do you like to fish, and isn't that a great sport in Canada?"

"One at a time, young woman; one at a time. I don't care much about fishing myself. I'd rather play golf than to fish, though I believe they do bite pretty well along the St. Lawrence sometimes."

"Somebody is always getting up a fishing expedition; getting into old clothes, and tramping off to the woods with a creel over one shoulder, and swinging a pall of worms, but I always was more attracted by the slant of the sun over a hill on the links than the dancing rays on the water, so I shouldered my clubs and went the other way."

"I believe golf is a hobby of yours, too."

"I shouldn't be at all surprised. It is certainly a great sport," he answered.

"You know Justice Harlan is accredited with a fondness for following the unruly little ball, but I am told he doesn't like it referred to as a 'hobby,'" I said.

"Oh, doesn't he? Well, now, that just goes to show that no judge should be allowed to sit on his own case."

"Is Murray Bay an old haunt of yours, or is it a more recent discovery?" I asked.

"Oh, I have been going there every summer for years. I haven't missed a summer up there, except when I was in the Philippines."

At the mention of the Philippines, back came the official Mr. Taft, struggling to look judicially through the genial countenance of "Big Bill," and turning the pile of papers over, wearily.

"I hadn't realized before how hard I work till I am face to face with the fact that I have not time for hobbies."

"Well, you'll soon be up in Murray Bay, with the golf links, which, I still believe, is a real hobby, and you can develop some."

"I think I must have had some in the past, but I have forgotten what they were, and save for the official Mr. Taft and his Philippines, I lead a hobbyless existence."

"I know most men have really interesting little things about themselves that they can tell and that make awfully good 'copy' for your profession, and it does seem too bad that I should be so uninteresting."

"Well, surely you know that being Secretary of War you do not need to be interesting," I said.

"Well, surely I know that the public isn't going to read an itemized account of what a man does, whoever he is, unless he does something once in a while out of the ordinary."

"This is about the way it runs, this account of my doings; 'Rise in the morning and come to work. Then work all day and at night go home tired, too tired to even read, and go to bed.'"

"Well, I hope the rejuvenating atmosphere of Murray Bay will at least give you a breathing spell, and do, please, get a hobby," I said.

G. B. Burnhans Testifies After Four Years.

G. B. Burnhans, of Carlisle Center, N. Y., writes: "About four years ago I wrote you stating that I had been entirely cured of a severe kidney trouble by taking less than two bottles of Foley's Kidney Cure. It entirely stopped the brick dust sediment and pain and symptoms of kidney disease disappeared. I am glad to say that I have never had a return of any of those symptoms during the four years that have elapsed and I am evidently cured to stay cured, and heartily recommend Foley's Kidney Cure to any one suffering from kidney or bladder trouble. For sale by W. A. D'Alemberte, druggist and apothecary."
